

Lesson 15. Grammar: Participle.

Topic: Abu Ali ibn-Sina (Avicenna).

Participle

What is Participle?

A participle is a type of word derived from a verb that is used for a variety of purposes, such as an adjective or to construct verb tenses. Participles themselves are considered to be a different part of speech than verbs, but they look a lot like the verbs they come from. There are two main participles in English: the past participle, which usually ends in “-ed”, and the present participle, which ends in “-ing”. A third “type” of participle, the perfect participle, is actually a combination of one specific present participle and a past participle.

1. Present Participle	Verb + ing	Walking Dancing
2. Past Participle	V.3	Walked Danced
3. Perfect Participle	Having + v.3	Having walked
